Photos Search Join Us on Facebook The Internet Explorer team plans to remove support for the SSL 2.0, TLS 1.0, and TLS 1.1 protocols in a future version of Internet Explorer. We recommend that you stop using SSL 2.0, TLS 1.0, and TLS 1.1 as soon as possible. Follow the guidelines outlined below to minimize the potential impact on your sites.

Support Lifecycle of SSL Protocols in IE11 The SSL 2.0, TLS 1.0, and TLS 1.1 protocols were deprecated in late 2016, and will be removed by IE11 in a future version of the browser. As a result, it will not be possible for a modern browser to communicate directly with an older browser, and the use of such obsolete protocols will eventually be disallowed. Note that removing SSLv2 support is independent from removing TLS1 support. From Pre-2015 Versions of Internet Explorer If you are concerned about the availability of SSLv2, TLS1, and TLS1.1 support in internet explorer, you can continue to use them. To do so, use the upgrade to TLS.https header in any HTTP requests. Although a modern browser will not be able to access the Internet with the SSL2, TLS1, or TLS1.1 protocols, other protocols and protocols that use the protocols as a part of their cryptographic handshake will be unaffected. TLS Security Guidelines To help mitigate the risk of using SSL 2.0, TLS 1.0, or TLS 1.1 protocols, follow these guidelines when using SSL, TLS, or any protocols that use them in the cryptographic handshake: Maintain a recent version of all server and client software. Maintain the latest version of internet explorer. Upgrade to TLS as soon as you can. Consider disabling SSL 3.0. Consider disabling TLS 1.0. Consider disabling TLS 1.1. Consider disabling TLS. Consider disabling DH. Consider disabling SRP. Consider disabling PSK. Consider disabling CMP. Consider disabling
